AI-ASSISTED SAMPLE

Prepared by Jennevie Javier · Fictional clinic, fictional clients

Three real-world situations a clinic front desk handles every week: a reschedule, a complaint, and a new client question. Each reply follows the same simple rules:

- Answer the actual question in the first two lines.
- Never give medical advice. Health questions go to the vet, and urgent ones get a phone call.
- End with one clear next step, so the client knows exactly what happens now.

1. Rescheduling a vaccine appointment

From: Daniel Wilson · Subject: Need to move Max's appointment

Hi, Max is booked for his booster shots this Thursday at 10am but I have to travel for work. Can we move it to next week? Also is it bad if his booster is a few days late?

Reply · Subject: Re: Need to move Max's appointment

Hi Daniel,

No problem at all, I've cancelled Thursday's 10am slot for Max. For next week, I can offer:

- Tuesday, 9:30am
- Wednesday, 2:00pm
- Friday, 11:00am

Just reply with the one that works and I'll lock it in and send a confirmation.

About the timing of his booster, that's a great question for Dr. Patel. I've added a note to Max's file so she can check his vaccine record, and if the new date changes anything, we'll call you before the visit.

Safe travels!

> Why it works: confirms the cancellation first so he isn't left wondering, gives three specific times instead of "when are you free?", and passes the medical question to the vet without brushing it off.

2. A frustrated client: long wait and a confusing bill

From: Karen Torres · Subject: Not happy with yesterday's visit

I waited 50 minutes past my appointment time with a nervous cat in a carrier. Then the bill had a $38 charge I didn't understand and nobody explained it. Honestly I'm thinking about switching clinics.

Reply · Subject: Re: Not happy with yesterday's visit

Hi Karen,

I'm really sorry. Waiting 50 minutes with a nervous cat is stressful for both of you, and you should have been told about the delay and walked through your bill. Thank you for telling us directly.

I checked your invoice: the $38 line is the fecal test that Dr. Patel ran during Luna's exam. I've attached an itemized copy with each charge explained in plain words. If anything still doesn't look right, our practice manager, Ana, can go over it with you by phone.

About the wait: an emergency came in just before your slot, and we didn't update the waiting room. I've shared your message with Ana so the team updates clients every 15 minutes when we're running behind.

Would a short call with Ana this week help? Reply with a good time and she'll call you.

> Why it works: a real apology that names the actual problem (no "sorry for any inconvenience"), a direct answer about the charge, one concrete change, and an offer that gives the client control. No arguing, no excuses.

3. New client: does the clinic see rabbits?

From: Hannah Clark · Subject: Question about rabbits

Hello! We just adopted a rabbit named Snowy. Do you see rabbits, and what do I need for a first visit? Can I book online?

Reply · Subject: Re: Question about rabbits

Hi Hannah,

Congratulations on adopting Snowy! Yes, we see rabbits, and Dr. Reyes handles most of our rabbit visits.

For a first visit, please bring:

- Snowy in a secure carrier, with a towel inside
- Any papers from the shelter or breeder (vaccine or health records)
- A list of what Snowy eats each day
- Any questions you have, big or small

You can book online any time at larkspurlanevet.example/book. Choose "New patient exam" and pick a time with Dr. Reyes. If you'd rather book by phone, call us at (217) 555-0142, Monday to Saturday, 8am to 6pm.

We're looking forward to meeting Snowy!

> Why it works: answers "yes" right away, turns the first-visit prep into a checklist, and makes booking a single step. The warm opening fits a happy moment for the client.
